Xanax may cause side effects in some individuals, including drowsiness, dizziness, fatigue, confusion, headache, or impaired coordination. More serious risks can include slowed breathing, misuse, overdose, dependence, withdrawal symptoms, or increased sedation when combined with alcohol or other medications.

Patients should avoid alcohol and other sedating medications while taking Xanax unless specifically directed by a healthcare provider. It is important to take the medication exactly as prescribed and never share it with others.

Xanax is a prescription benzodiazepine used to manage certain anxiety and panic disorders. It works by enhancing the effect of a calming neurotransmitter in the brain, helping reduce acute anxiety symptoms. Because Xanax can cause dependence and interactions with other substances, it requires careful dosing, limited duration when appropriate, and close clinical oversight. Telehealth has modernized access by enabling virtual evaluations with
